Waco Evening News
WACO, TEXAS, DEC. 10, 1888.

CITY ITEMS.

For Sale or Rent, a residence on the corner of 5th and Jefferson streets. Good elstern, hydrants, two-story barn and good cellar connected with house. Apply to Van Hall.

EVENING NEWS office, Franklin street between 4th and 5th streets, in new Jones' building.

Fine weather!
Biggest crop of honey in five years, and honey cheap.

Mud drying up rapidly and cotton coming in freely.

A number of distinguished lawyers are in the city on legal business.

Business is beginning to revive again after its temporary prostration.

See the open letter of J. R. Robinson, grocer, and then give the house a call.

The sun shines out beautifully on the cotton pickers, which means ducats for the holidays.

The Waco failures have no significance as regards the financial status of the Waco merchants, and don't you forget it.

Apprehension is felt in a certain locality, in a thickly settled part of the city, over several suspicious cases of black jaundice.

"Wisdom crieth aloud on the streets" when J. I. Moore and C. Faulkner asks for subscriptions to the Canning factory stock.

The writ of error in the case of Jim Newsome, the lone highwayman, now in the penitentiary at Sing Sing, N. Y., was to be argued before Judge Pardee to-day, has been postponed.

The event of the week is a German, to be given by Miss Buelah Padgett on Wednesday night, complimentary to Miss Florine Ross, of Austin.

Estelle Clayton will never play to so small a house as on Saturday night when she comes back to Waco. The play was both but the girl is a daisy.

The "Quick or the Dead" is either tragical comedy or comical tragedy, and to make out which, is what is racking the soul with an awful and ponderous anxiety.

We can never have very hard times when the country is flooded with food and feed and there is a good cotton crop. There will always be a bit of money in circulation.

The churches yesterday were well attended, the bright crisp air and soft autumn sun, wooing people to divine things and the roads in the evening were gay with the prancing of horses feet.

Old Lady—You seem to have a cold yet?

Stranger—Yes, madam.

Old Lady—Well, I'll tell you what to do. Jos' go home and put your feet in a tub o' hot mustard water an'—

Stranger (gruffly)—That's fine advice to give a man with a cork leg, now, isn't it?

The following is the roster of cases at the police court this morning: Jim Gusepy, Jim Scooty, Mike Martin $5 each for plain drunk; Louis Schuber, $3 for jumping off and on train; C. Lampke, $3 for indecent exposure; Chas. Goodin, cursing; Chas. Shelton, vagrancy; A. Tobias, assault, were given a fine of five dollars each and E. Perkins, $3 for yelling.

The festive and intoxicative mince-pies is again on deck, grand, delicious and full of the memories of boyhood days when we stole them from the pantry and ate them in fear and trembling behind the woodshed. It is as full of frolic this year and as usual in prancing nightmares as it was fifteen hundred years ago, when it was first invented by Godolphin, a Carthusian monk of Mat Carmel.

PERSONALS.

Judge D. A. Pardee and wife, are in the city.

S. C. Upshaw Esq. of Hillsboro, is in the city.

Mr. G. A. Lack, is out of the city on a business trip.

John T. Brady, one of the distinguished lawyers of Houston, is in the city.

Miss Corinne Willie of Galveston, will be in the city to-morrow, on a visit to Miss Alys Downs.

Mrs. Jennie Pepper, of Temple, who has been visiting Mrs. H. A. Wilder and Mrs. W. A. Kirk, returned home this evening.

H. T. Ring Esq. of Houston, is in the city on legal business. Mr. Ring is one of the attorneys in the case of Hanrick vs. Hanrick, in the federal court.

H. F. Ring Esq. of Houston, now in the city, is a lawyer of great ability. He is also a great advocate of Henry George's single land tax. His reputation throughout the state, is a fine one.

A Letter.

House-keepers, bear in mind "money saved is money made." Why stay in old ruts when you can live on the fat of the land? For instance, we sell Cutting and Lusk's three-pound goods (assorted) for $2.00 per dozen. Did you ever hear of such a thing? We have everything you can call for. Our mourning tourist, Mr. Adams, mounted upon a fleet mustang will take your order. If you phone us our Mr. Brown will, while wrapping up goods, hook his ear over the wire and register your order. And we will deliver with dispatch, care and neatness.

Respectfully,
JAMES R. ROBINSON.

Waco, Dec. 10, '88.

Daisy Photographs.

Deane's old photograph gallery on Austin street was always a popular place but under the new change and management of the new proprietor, Mr. J. L. Bergstrom, it has become one of the finest galleries in Texas. Mr. Bergstrom has the reputation of being away up at the head of his profession, and in fact he has not a superior in the United States. He brings to the new business new and improved apparatus of the latest style and his work is simply ne plus ultra. Waco has always had good photograph galleries but this new departure gives it one that distances anything yet seen. The work done by Mr. Bergstrom must be seen to be appreciated. It is of wonderful beauty and finish and the ladies who have had photographs taken are in ecstasies over it. It has already attracted a great deal of attention and we predict for the new gallery such a business as was never been done in this city before.

Alone in London.

The following telegram was received yesterday:
San Antonio, Dec. 9, 1888.
J. P. Garland, Manager Opera House.
"Alone in London played to biggest house in four years. Most pronounced success in the history of the house."
T. W. MULLALLY,
Manager Opera House San Antonio.
"Alone in London" is taking the country by storm. Nothing like it. It will be at the Garland on Tuesday night. The Box-office now open, and there is a rush for tickets.

WHALE MEAT AS DIET.

It Is Not Only Wholesome but Also Very Palatable.
Talk of butchers' shops. A whale is a whole meat market in itself. It is a floating Smithfield, a marine edition of Copenhagen fields, an entire Billingsgate. Nobody need ever starve when whales are in season. A few of them would provision a city for a long siege. Fortunately, as the world grows older, it learns to judge more fairly of neglected kinds of provisions. It is a pity that the true value of whale flesh has not been discovered long ago. How many poor families might have been amply fed if only "whale extract" had come into fashion years back. Gourmantes should also show their gratitude for the gift of a fresh flavor. It must be admitted, with regret, but without hesitation, that the list of ordinary articles of food is very limited, and that beef and mutton are apt to become monotonous, even when varied with fish and poultry, and all the eatable fruits of the earth as well. The edibility of the whale is, therefore, an exciting discovery.

The only drawback to the pleasant picture which arises when the mind contemplates 50,000 people dining off one animal is contained in the thought that whales, when they are proved to be valuable for dietetic purposes, will be hunted until they become scarce and perhaps extinct. To guard against this danger we have no doubt that whale breeding would come into fashion. People who found other forms of food culture unremunerative might remove to countries where the climate allowed whales to live in comfort and establish whale farms at the mouths of tidal rivers. There is, in fact, no end to the opening for enterprise and ingenuity which are available owing to this remarkable addition to the domestic larder.—Medical Classics.

A Horse in Tropical Africa.

Several incidents of recent African exploration call to mind the stories that were told of the early travels of a white man in this country. A white man on horseback is a very unusual spectacle in tropical Africa, and the animal Mr. Hodister rode a few months ago made almost as much of a sensation as the horses that Cortez introduced into Mexico. Hodister's journey was a short one, extending only from Landana, on the coast, to Boma, on the Congo, but it led the traveler through a densely peopled region of which little is yet known.

"My horse," he writes, "made a great sensation. At sight of him all the women in the villages at first were petrified with astonishment. They stood motionless, with their eyes fixed on the strange animal. Coming to themselves at last, with their hands raised above their heads, they raised their cry of 'Ho, ho, ho!' expressive of boundless astonishment. Some of them threw themselves upon the ground, smiting their breasts. Could it be, they said, that such a great beast, with a white man above him, was harmless? Such an animal must certainly eat black people."

"When we convinced them at last that horse was harmless and that he was a very useful animal they ventured nearer. They had no eyes for anything but the horse. As we passed through the villages many of the inhabitants followed us. The men turned back after a mile or so, but many of the women, who showed the greatest interest and curiosity, followed us for three miles. When my horse trotted they trotted, too, their eyes fixed on the beast. Unmindful of where they were stepping they fell into the furrows in the manioc fields, and tumbled down in the tall grass. They kept pointing the animals out to the babies that were fastened on their backs. From some of the villages deputations came to me asking me to stop a while in their towns that they might have time to admire the prodigy.
A whole menagerie of African curiosities would not excite so much attention in the civilized world as this horse aroused in a part of Africa where the zebra never roams and no species of the horse family is known.—New York Sun.

Severe Plainness of Tolstoi's Home.

On arriving at the house Count Tolstoi showed me into a little room on the right hand side of the entrance. "There," said he, "you can occupy that—sleeping in the little library among the books, and you can dress in the adjoining room where I dress." The dressing room was also the sitting room and work room of the count. In the recess by the window lay the shoemaking tools with which he used to employ himself; near the door was a washstand and mirror.

"Perhaps you would like to wash now," said he, opening the washstand. "You can wash here. When you are done you can empty the water out so," and, suiting the action to the word, the count stepped out on the raised terrace in front of the house and flung the dirty water out into the garden. This was done so naturally, and with such an evident unconscious confidence that it was the right thing to do, that you could not feel fainter than a moment's impression as to the incongruity of the novelist, philosopher and nobleman, emptying his dirty water for the convenience of his guest. I had been told, moreover, that the count's simplicity was more theatrical than real—that he fared as a peasant and "did" his hair with a silver comb, and so forth. I saw nothing of this. There was certainly no silver plate or luxurious furnishings in the count's living rooms. Everything was severely plain and in harmony with the desire of its occupant to simplify his life.—W. T. Stead in St. Louis Republic.

The Poet Gray's Unhappy Life.

Gray's was, in many ways, a melancholy life. His vitality was low, and such happiness as he enjoyed was of a languid kind. Physically and emotionally he was unfit to cope with realities, and this though he never felt it to be such as to the most crushing evils that humanity sustains. He was never poor, he was never despised, he had many devoted friends; but on the other hand he had a wretched and diseased constitution, he suffered from all sorts of prostrating complaints, from imaginary insanities, violent antipathies and want of sympathy. Fame such as is rarely accorded to man came to him; he was accepted as without doubt the first of living English poets; and he took no kind of pleasure in it. He was horrified to find himself a celebrity; he refused to be poet laureate; he refused honorary degrees; when at Cambridge the young scholars are asked to have the dinner to see him as he passed in the street; it was a sincere pain to him. Coburn, counterbalanced his fits of unutterable melancholy by his hours of tranquil serenity over tobacco and muffins and warm coal fires, with the curtains drawn close. Johnson enlivened his boding depression by tyrannizing over an adoring circle. But Gray's only compensations were his friends. Any one who knows Gray's letters to and about his young friend Bonstetter, knows how close and warm it is possible for friendship to be.—Arthur Benson in Macmillan's Magazine.

Kentucky's Mountain Beauties.

While the mountain men are generally unprepossessing in appearance, having thin frames, thin faces, thin scraggy beards and trembling open mouths, the young women are fair. Their cheeks are red, their forms are plump and rounded, their limbs taper and their carriage is graceful. When they laugh, which they do frequently and heartily, they show white teeth. In spite of the fact that they learn to smoke stoneware pipes with fish pole stems at an age that would compel a northern man to marry a very young lass if he would have a wife with a bearable breath. The forms of the mountain girls are such as nature provides. There are thousands of them who never saw a corset, and who never will; neither do they bang their hair, but they are no less attractive, even to northern eyes, on account of their peculiarity, and if one doubts this, let him come down here and see for himself.—Mouth of Pond P. O. (Ky.) Cor. New York Sun.

The Little "Fads" of Dear Ones.

It is, perhaps, well that some distant traits mark us all—it prevents wearisome monotony. How affectionately do we remember the little characteristic habits and fancies of those whom we love, more especially when our memories in these matters revert to the dead. The little "fads," as we call them, of father and mother become sacred as we look back upon them in our after years, and the quaint peculiarities of many a dead friend are remembered lovingly when they themselves have passed away.
